The pandemic caused by COVID-19 has worsened the pre-existing inequalities, vulnerabilities and increased the possibility of violence against women and children specifically of the most vulnerable population: Dalits of Nepal. Across every sphere, from health to economy, social protection to government security, the impact of COVID-19 is exacerbated for Dalits. So, as to ascertain the impact of COVID-19 on Dalits and to identify the needs and capacities of Dalit community to cope with this unprecedented situation, Feminist Dalit Organization (FEDO) conducted the rapid assessment survey in 19 districts of 7 provinces with altogether of 265 Dalit women respondents of Nepal.

According to the study, out of 265 respondents, even though 94.4% Dalit women had some knowledge of COVID-19 and its symptoms, only 43% were applying different preventive measures such as; regular hand wash, use of sanitizer and mask, avoiding public gathering and maintaining social-distancing.
This shows more than half percent of respondents didn’t adopt the preventive safety measures to tackle COVID-19 due to their economic constraints and lack of access to information.

Similarly, a situational analysis of Dalit girls and women was also done in regard to the nature of violence and discrimination faced by them during this lock-down. From the study, we found out that only 46.9% have heard, 8.6% faced and 13.2% have discovered about the violence faced by Dalit women in their community, however, the rest 44.9% of respondents are unknown of any incidents of domestic violence. This shows that even though girls and women from Dalit community are more prone to the violence, most of them are ignorant of it due to lack of awareness in them.

Moreover, the study also shows that COVID-19 has highly impacted the livelihoods of Dalit communities, with more than 89.4% of the respondents reporting to have lost their income/jobs which further expanded the problem of accommodation, food, health and other aspects. Further, 61.3% claimed to have health-related problems, 71.1% facing the problems of food, 15.7% is having accommodation problem and 22.6% of the respondent faced caste and gender-based discrimination in quarantine sites and relief distribution.

According to the study, only 51.8% mentioned they have received the relief support from local government and non-governmental organization but 48.2% haven’t received any relief packages yet because of the discriminatory practice during relief distribution, inaccessible relief support to Dalits and also lack of awareness in them about the services provided by the government and other sector (as per the study: 2.8% doesn’t know anything about relief distribution).
According to the study, only 51.8% mentioned they have received the relief support from local government and non-governmental organization but 48.2% haven’t received any relief packages yet because of the discriminatory practice during relief distribution, inaccessible relief support to Dalits and also lack of awareness in them about the services provided by the government and other sector (as per the study: 2.8% doesn’t know anything about relief distribution).

So, based on the evidence from this survey, the COVID-19 pandemic and its consequences are amplifying the vulnerabilities of marginalized groups who are already facing exclusion and structural discrimination, and thus possess limited capacities to find viable coping strategies. So, aside from immediate relief support prioritizing the marginalized community in concert with local governments, this study suggests to broaden the need to strengthen existing social security systems at all levels and to ensure inclusive access. Also, the government and non-government organization should plan on implementing those programs which supports or creates income-generation opportunities to the marginalized groups.

RENU ADHIKARI, CHAIRPERSON AT NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF WOMEN HUMAN RIGHTS DEFENDERS (NAWHRD)

Any women movement not included Dalit women would be a failure. We should revise the existing social, economic and political structure for the well-being of every section, especially backward women with social movement, collective voices and common hardship. The existing intersectionality should be worked out for the just and equitable society.
COVID-19 lockdown has intensified discriminatory practices and domestic violence in Nepal, ultimately leading to 2200 suicide cases registered only during this lockdown. The government is failing to protect the life of victims facing domestic violence and discrimination in this pandemic due to lack of implication of the amended constitution laws.

Likewise, with the same motive, FEDO conducted province-level webinar at different provinces: Province 1, 2, 5, Gandaki, Sudur Pashim and Karnali province respectively as to draw attention of the concerned stakeholders and held them accountable for addressing such issues of Dalit and Dalit women at local as well as national level.

By successfully hosting the event, FEDO was able to enlighten and aware 342 peoples on the impact of COVID-19 to Dalit women and the efforts to be made for mitigating such problems in this unprecedented situation.

Certainly, the novel coronavirus is worrisome for everyone. But for marginalized Dalit population who lives with poverty, health inequities, and other burdens, the outbreak is especially brutal. Even though the Dalit women representatives are working on ensuring the rights and creating an opportunity for Dalit communities, the Dalit population are still prone to it.
UMITA BARAILI
MEMBER OF STATE PARLIAMENT OF PROVINCE-1

The majority of Dalits working in the informal service sector, mostly in lowest-level jobs, relying on daily wages are more suffering from hunger, deprived from having access to basic services, and right to information. Even though the state government has brought some subsidy programs and vocational programs to the vulnerable families in the agricultural sector, Dalit aren't able to use that opportunity since they don't have their own land and investment for production, hence lead to downfall of their livelihood.

SOM NATH PORTEL
HEAD OF DCC, JHAPA

During the global epidemic, caste discrimination and violence against women in the Dalit community is extreme. Various incidents has been registered and encountered throughout this time period. The worst reality is even in this pandemic, we could not unite, come along for each other and help. In Dalit, while falling sick they couldn't walk out to hospital in fear of getting beaten-up by the police, due to no access to resources to get the passes, no enough money to pay for the ambulance have made them die of disease and hunger.

DAL RAWAL
MINISTER, SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT MINISTRY OF KARNALI PROVINCE

Concerning the issue of Dalit and marginalized people, Nepal Government has formed the monitoring committee under Women and Children Welfare Department of Social Development Ministry for addressing the violence and discrimination at local level. Through this committee, the Government has been monitoring the quarantine area regularly for controlling the case of possible violence.
Cases of Violence against Dalit women and girls during COVID-19 lock-down

One’s home is said to be the safest place for everyone but the increasing number of cases of violence against Dalit women and girls during the lock-down shows that it's not really safe for them. This COVID-19 pandemic has further exacerbated the pre-existing problem of rape, murder, violence and discrimination against Dalit women, particularly domestic violence in Nepal. In most of the cases, the perpetrators of violence were found to be husbands, in-laws and parents. These cases has been recorded but goes unreported since the perpetrators are family members and despite of filing formal complaints, the survivors rather represses such instances even from their family members.

So this makes the situation unpleasant and dangerous since the victims of domestic violence have very limited options when it comes to receiving help and support under lockdown and in spite of the huge effort to save a large number of lives from the pandemic, this lockdown has put some vulnerable groups more at risk.

A TEENAGE GIRL HELD CAPTIVE AND GANG-RAPED FOR DAYS AFTER BEING DRUGGED IN KANCHANPUR- 1ST SEPT 2020

Shedding light on the increasing rape cases, FEDO staged a peaceful demonstration in Maitighar mandala demanding justice for all the victims and stringent punishment against the perpetrators involved. WOMAN ASSAULTED ON WITCHCRAFT ALLEGATION

“I have been accused and cursed of being a witch countless times,“

45-year-old Dalit woman of Golbazar Municipality-3 of Siraha District, Shova Paswan was accused of witchcraft by her own family members and was bitten almost to death since the last 2 years. Experiencing such a pathetic conduct of torture, she isolated herself from participating in any social functions or gatherings. She suffered a lot from violence and struggled really hard to overcome it. So seeking for help, she came in contact with FEDO Siraha for concrete legal backing as to ensure protection and justice to the victim. Not only this but FEDO also supported her in social rehabilitation and provided social counseling to her family members as well.

Now, Shova Paswan is involved in a group formed by FEDO where she actively participates in women right campaign and trainings that relates to the human rights situation of Dalit women, the problem faced by them, the issues that are prevalent; the bottlenecks that obstruct in achieving justice and the ways to overcome it.
A 14-year-old girl living with her parents Rita Devi and Radhechan Ram at Bisangbharpur-11, Bara district was kidnapped by 18-year-old boy Sonu Mahato, son of Jatiya Devi on 19th Ashoj 2076. Sonu was their neighbor and was keeping an eye on her since the last 6-7 months. So, seeking the chance, he took her to India at his Aunt's place planning to sell her in the brothel of Betiya, India. However, due to 5 days of strong investigation, the villagers were able to find them out. After that, with 400 witnesses, the villagers of Bisangbharpur-11 came up with a decision to get them marriage within 1 month of time.

They even got married but marrying didn’t seem to be an ultimate solution toward that problem. As that girl was of Dalit community (Chamar), it was indigestible for the boy's family to accept her. So because of this, they didn’t let her (girl) stay inside their house, instead forced her to sleep at cow byre. So after spending days sleeping in the cow byre, the boy again took her off to Kathmandu with an intention to sell the girl at brothel of India. So seeking for help, the girl’s parents reached to FEDO and after listening to them, FEDO pressurized the District Police Office of Bara to file the complaint and to carry forward their search for the lost ones. The search was successful as the girl returned safely to her house. She even got settled marrying another guy after 4 months of that incident. But did the culprit was punished for his crime? Did that 14-year-old girl obtain justice? NO, because the girl's family didn’t want to take it forward despite of FEDO’s initiation to help them.

Though the justice wasn’t served in this case, we are satisfied that we could save the girl from human trafficking.
